The Difference Between a Song and a Hymn...

Hymns

A traditional hymn is considered a formal song which is sung to God by the entire congregation in public worship. Metrical psalms can also be considered hymns.

For the traditional hymns there are specific hymn tunes like “Amazing Grace” which is always sung to New Britain. The main thing about the tune of a hymn is the rhythm (8.8.8.8.). The lyrics of the hymns and the melodies are interchangeable.

The music which is used by trained musicians to refer to hymns is called “chordal.” The chordal has harmony, melody, and rhythm. The main function of the music in a hymn is to emphasize the words.

Hymns and their structure have been derived or originated from classical music. It is often a four-part harmony.

Hymns have been sung for over hundreds of years and combine music, melody, and harmony in such a way that it reinforces positivity.

Praise Songs or Worship Songs

Praise songs, also called worship songs, are informal songs sung in churches in praise of God.

Music is the main defining feature of praise songs instead of the lyrics or words. They have many repetitions not a four-part harmony. The music range is considered limited, and it is not influenced by classical music.

In praise songs, a single person or a group performs the whole song, and the songs are accompanied by many musical instruments not just an organ.

Praise songs are not traditional songs. They are influenced by the present culture, and new songs are being composed regularly.

It is believed that praise songs were introduced in the 1960s. Some songs like “Majesty” were included in the hymnals. However, traditional inclusion of songs in the hymnal do not make it a hymn.

Thank you for joining us today for this wonderful Hymn Sing Service!! Happy Sunday to you all! God Bless!
